

Karin Herzfeld is an Attorney Advisor in the Office of General Counsel at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. She focuses on electricity market matters, including interconnection, transmission planning, and energy, capacity, and ancillary service market rules. She currently serves as lead attorney and legal compliance coordinator on Order Nos. 2222 and 841, the Commission's landmark rulemakings removing barriers to distributed energy resource aggregations and electric storage resources in wholesale markets. While in law school, Karin interned for a judge on the Maryland Court of Appeals, and worked for Georgetown's Institute of Public Representation, where she drafted a Supreme Court brief on behalf of amicus Consumer Watchdog. Karin also worked for the Environmental Protection Agency, where she led the Agency's semi-annual and Recovery Act performance reporting. Karin holds a J.D. from Georgetown University Law Center and a B.A. in Economics and Sociology from the University of Maryland, Baltimore County.
